

Bob's Brief Bio

I am older today than I was yesterday and younger than I hope to be tomorrow.

Born of a working class family, I began work at twelve in my fathers shop and have worked all my life. My experiences are varied and a detailed history would fill several pages and most probably prove incredibly boring to the reader. I frankly cannot envision my life without working in some way, doing something.

My wife and daughter are a source of great joy to me and they, together with my faith, provide a foundation and an oasis in my daily life.

I am a student of history and a current events and political "junkie". Todays social and economic climate is to me both frightening and humorous. On one hand I am seriously concerned about the world my child will grow up in. On the other, I find the antics of many of those in positions of power a kind of pathetic comedy that I try to laugh at rather than cry. It is less painful.
