

NORTH KOREA'S FERTILIZER PROBLEM

North Korea's Dear Leader, Kim Jong Un, made a speech to his people the other day calling on them to do their duty by producing 200 pounds each day of "human fertilizer" to fertilize the farm fields of North Korea.

The radio commentator made some comment that, due to the generally diminutive size of the average North Korean because of their near starvation diet, it might be difficult for them to produce human waste in excess of their total body weight.

I have an idea that should not only help solve North Korea's fertilizer problem but also further the cause of Peace while bringing joy to the American heartland.

Let's load up the United States Congress and send them on a combination extended field trip and peace mission to North Korea.

If Congress can spread it around there the way they do here, North Korea's fertilizer problem will be solved and its agricultural fields will be a rich, verdant green in a short period of time.

Further, when Congress returns to Washington D.C. we could permanently move the United Nations Headquarters from New York City to North Korea. That should keep North Korean farmlands green for decades to come.

Everybody wins. What could possibly go wrong?

Just trying to help out.

Bob Bandy